

POR

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.

When he considers the manifold temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune. Leave to thy children tumult, strife and war,

Portions of toil, and legacies of care.

4. A wife's fortune. To PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To divide; to parcel.

The gods who portion out The lots of princes as of private men.

Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Argos the feat of sovereign rule I chose,

Where my Ulysses and his race might reign, And portion to his tribes the wide domain.

2. To endow with a fortune. Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,

The young who labour, and the old who rest.

PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides. PORTLINESS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour.

Such pride is praise, such portlinefs is honour, That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;

And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, seemliness with portlinefs, and curtness with flayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?

PORTLY. adj. [from port.] 1. Grand of mien.

Rudely thou wrong'dst my dear heart's desire, In finding fault with her too portly pride.

Your Argosies with portly fail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Or as it were the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

A portly prince, and goodly to the fight, He seem'd a son of Anak for his height.

2. Bulky; swelling. A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Our house little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it; And that same greatness too, which our own hands

Have help'd to make so portly.

PORTMAN. n. f. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports.

PORTMANTEAU. n. f. [from portemanteau, Fr.] A chest or bag in which cloaths are carried.

I defied him to carry one of my portmanteaus; but he laughed, and bid another do it.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portoise, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck.

PORTRAIT. n. f. [from portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael.

To PORTRAIT. v. a. [from portrait, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs.

I portrait in Arthur before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues.

PORTRAITURE. n. f. [from portrait, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.

By the image of my cause I see The portraiture of his.

Let some strange mysterious dream, Wave at his wings in airy stream

Of lively portraiture display'd, Softly on my eye-lids laid.

Herein was also the portraiture of a hart.

POS

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Her wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessions endure. He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator.

To PORTRAY. v. a. [from portraire, Fr.] 1. To paint; to describe by picture.

The Earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple.

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Our Phenix queen was portrayed too bright, Beauty alone could beauty take to right. 2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with boastful argument portray'd. PORTRESS. n. f. [from porter] A female guardian of a gate.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd. The shoes put on, our faithful portress

Admits us in to form the fortrefs; While like a cat with walnuts frod,

Stumbling at ev'ry step she trod. PORTWIGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a portwigle or tadpole.

PORE. adj. [from porus, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores. To the court arriv'd th' admiring son

Beholds the vaulted roofs of pore stone. To POSE. v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction. zepele. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop. Learning was pos'd, philosophy was set,

Sophisters taken in a filier's net. How God's eternal son should be man's brother, Poseth his proudest intellectual power. As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give the following instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children.

2. To appose; to interrogate. She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no.

POSER. n. f. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser.

POSITED. adj. [from positus, Lat.] It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb. Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false.

POSITION. n. f. [from positio, Fr. positio, Latin.] 1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams.

Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same things, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him.

By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye.

We have a different prospect of the same thing, according to the different position of our understandings toward it.

Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies.

2. Principle laid down. Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what conscience can ye accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives.

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the position that follow, but always on those which go before.

3. Advancement of any principle. A fallacious illation is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent.

4. [In

POS

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pampus; or a double consonant, as axile.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position. The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by-purge or vomit; as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations.

POSITIVE. adj. [from positivus, Lat. positif, Fr.] 1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself.

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied. As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son; though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion. I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season.

Some positive persisting fops we know, That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;

But you, with pleasure own your errors past, And make each day a critic on the last.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment. In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so.

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made.

Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see, Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

5. Having the power to enact any law. Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative.

6. Certain; assured. POSITIVELY. adv. [from positivus.] 1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

Give me some breath, some little pause, Before I positively speak in this.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

2. It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past.

3. Certainly; without dubitation. It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms. I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men.

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.] 1. Actuality; not mere negation. The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the positiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence. This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion and speculation, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact; in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith.

POSITIVITY. n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word. Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to join some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too.

POSITURE. n. f. [from positura, Lat.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary.

POSNET. n. f. [from posnet, Fr. Skinner.] A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no foibles more than silver; and again whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-dishes, posnets and such other silver vessels.

POSSE. n. f. [Latin.] An armed power; from posse comitatus, the power of the shires. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him.

As if the passion that rules, were the sheriff of the place, and came with all the posse, the understanding is seized.

To POSSESS. v. a. [from possidere, Lat. possider, Fr.] 1. To have as an owner; to be master of; to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let instructions enter Where folly now possesses?

Record a gift, Here in the court, of all he dies possess'd.

Unto his son. Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possesseth and possessioneth.

2. To seize; to obtain. The English marched towards the river Eske, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eske.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has posse before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet possest, How much you would?

—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats. This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns. This possession us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possest? Of happiness or not, who am alone

From all eternity? I hope to possess chymists and corpularians of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them.

The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just sense of the vanity of these craving appetites.

Whole houses, of their whole desires possest, Are often ruin'd at their own request.

Of fortune's favour long possest, He was with one fair daughter only blest.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the duchy of Milan and the avenue of France in Italy.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possessed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness.

4. To fill with something fixed. It is of unspeakable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words and actions at some laudable end.

Those, under the great officers, know every little case that is before the great man, and if they are possessed with honest minds, will consider poverty as a recommendation.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit. Beware what spirit rages in your breast;

For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are possest. Inspir'd within, and yet possest without.

I think, that the man is possest. To affect by intestine power.

He's possest with greatness, And speaks not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath. Let not your ears despite my tongue, Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Possest with rumours full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear. What fury, O son,

Possests thee, to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head?

With the rage of all their race possest, Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest.

POSSESSION. n. f. [from possession, Fr. possessione, Lat.] 1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession.

In possession such, not only of right, I call you.

2. The thing possessed. Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possessions.

To POSSESS. v. a. [from possidere, Fr. possider, Lat.] 1. To invest with property. Obsolete. Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred possesseth and possessioneth.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [from possession.] Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were people, whom having been of old freemen and possessors, the Lacedemonians had conquered.

20 C POSSESSIVE.
